The British Bee Journal and Bee-Keepers Adviser, 1920, Vol. 48

Excerpt from The British Bee Journal, and Bee-Keepers' Adviser, Vol. 25: January December, 1897 Whether or not modesty in a public man is recognised as'a useful quality, or otherwise, we will not stop to inquire', but, to the writer at least, it has always seemed a remarkable thing that, While men more or less eminent - or even prominent - in the world of bee keeping have been made familiar to all interested in the literature of the pursuit by their portraits, the one among the whole who (it is not too much to say) probably is better known and more! Universally esteemed the wide world over than any other, has gently, but firmly, withheld his consent to any publicity of this kind for himself. The British Bee Journal, and Bee-Keeper's Adviser, Vol. 14

Excerpt from The British Bee Journal, and Bee-Keepers Adviser, Vol. 15: January December, 1887 During the year considerable attention has been paid to the introduction of new races of bees. From Cyprus, Carniola, the Holy Land, South Africa, America, &c, there have been considerable importations. These attempts to introduce bees of superior powers have found much encouragement amongst our leading bee-masters, but the English black bee still continues to hold its place in the estimation of the great body of bee-keepers. The imports of honey for the year are not yet complete; we hope, however, in the course of the present month to have full statistics before us, when we propose to take the opportunity of dealing with both the honey imports for 1886 and the wax imports and exports for 1885. The British Bee Journal, Vol. 49

Excerpt from The British Bee Journal, Bee-Keepers' Record and Adviser, 1892, Vol. 20 It is a very curious feature in the intelligence of bees, or rather of the hand which guides them, this precaution which they take of, narrowing the entrances of their hives when they are threatened by the invasion of an enemy. The fact was already known in the days of Aristotle. I have only read about it in his book on animals since I have observed it in nature; he says it is with propolis that they narrow their entrances, but without any details as to the way they set about it, or of the form they give to this strange work. The British Bee Journal, Bee-Keepers' Record and Adviser, 1892, Vol. 20 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The British Bee Journal, Bee-Keepers' Record and Adviser, 1891, Vol. 19 Mr. Neighbour was engaged, with the aid of Mr. Duncan Keir, who was introduced to him by 'the Renfrewshire Bee-keeper, ' in packing and forwarding humble-bees to New Zealand during winter in a torpid state, for the purpose of fructifying red clover. The importation of Cyprian, Syrian, and Holy Land bees also claimed much of Mr. Neighbour's attention, and he was the first to introduce Carniolan bees into this country. At the German Department of the Exhibition of 1851, Mr. Neighbour purchased the improved metal plates for making wax foundation, and it was with these ib.t the foundation we used when we first commenced bee-keeping was made - a very different article to what is now used. Mr. Neighbour enjoyed unusual opportunities of becoming acquainted with the leading apiarian celebrities of the day; amongst others, liev. William Charles Cotton and Dr. Coster.
