Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England

Excerpt from The Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, 1852, Vol. 13 The species of pine with which this barren is covered changes as we proceed towards the south and west - probably from the change of Climate and exposure. In North Carolina it bears prim Cipally the Pitch pine (pinus rigida), which yields large supplies Of turpentine. This and the timber are shipped from the port of Wilmington in that State. In Georgia, again, the prevailing tree is the Yellow pine (pinus mitis), which yields a harder and more valuable timber than the Pitch pine. The chief difference, as I was informed, is that the sap or soft heart-wood in the Yellow pine is much less in diameter than in the Pitch pine, and thus the proportion of hard resinous wood in trees of the same size is much greater in the former than in the latter. Unlike some other reproductions of classic texts (1) We have not used OCR(Optical Character Recognition), as this leads to bad quality books with introduced typos. (2) In books where there are images such as portraits, maps, sketches etc We have endeavoured to keep the quality of these images, so they represent accurately the original artefact. Although occasionally there may be certain imperfections with these old texts, we feel they deserve to be made available for future generations to enjoy.

The Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England Volume the Second

Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England

Excerpt from The Journal of the Royal Agriculture Society of England, Vol. 69 Just about the time Of the Royal Agricultural Society's great Jubilee Show in Windsor Great Park, in June, 1889, as one outcome of which all those associated with the Society had to accustom themselves to addressing Colonel Kingscote as Sir Nigel, and Mr. Wilson as Sir Jacob, a somewhat remarkable man (now dead) was co-opted on the Council. He had been connected with a firm of agricultural engineers in earlier life, and was learned in all matters of farm machinery; but he had no taste whatever for live stock, and was no respecter of persons, however highly placed. He had, however, a great admiration for character, had read widely and deeply, and had fresh and piquant views on a great variety of subjects. He was a most useful man in committee, Often interpolating some shrewd remark which summarised the situation, but he contented himself at the Council meetings with watching and observing the idiosyncrasies of his colleagues. One day he suddenly said to me, I want you to tell me the secret of the influence exercised by Sir Nigel Kingscote at Hanover Square. He cannot be said to be a good speaker he is not so ready in the cut and thrust of debate as others holding opposite views; I should hardly call him farsighted or clever; and yet he always seems to dominate the Council. Why is this The best answer I could give on the spur of the moment was that Sir Nigel was a great gentleman, courteous and considerate to all, both high and low, a man of the highest honour integrity and simplicity of character, who said and did what he felt to be right without pose or regard for after consequences to himself.
