Secondary schools in Hong Kong are rolling out the revamped liberal studies course

The programme went through an overhaul and is now called 'citizenship and social development

Liberal studies was first introduced in 2009 as a core subject for senior secondary school students

The course aimed to enhance students' social awareness and critical thinking skills

Pro-establishment lawmakers blamed it for the violence that occurred during the 2019 protests

The Education Bureau overhauled the course to focus on national development and patriotism

Teaching materials also need to include elements on national security
