#third world foreign policy #social change charisma #international relations theory #developing nations policy #foreign policy making theory

This study investigates the profound interplay of social change, charismatic leadership, and evolving international behavior patterns. It endeavors to formulate a robust theory for foreign policy making, specifically tailored for nations within the Third World. By analyzing these critical factors, it provides a crucial framework for understanding how developing countries navigate and shape their international relations.

Students can use these dissertations as models for structuring their own work.
