How would a person's life be improved if they could better appreciate art?

Where does one start on their journey to appreciating or understanding art?

Do you see yourself as adding to or departing from Danto's ideas?

What, to you, is the difference between taste and aesthetic experience?

What is wrong with Dewey's conception of aesthetic experience?

Is there significance to coming back to an artwork years later and appreciating it differently?

Why do you think George Dickey called the 18th century the "century of taste?"

Why should we disregard the taste model of art appreciation?

What is problematic about taste-based biases?

What is your "art appreciative heuristic" and why is it better than the taste model?

Why is there resistance to throwing out the taste model of art appreciation?

Is it possible that some people are unable to escape their emotional reaction to beauty and thus are unable to approach their analysis of art in a cognitive manner?
