SOC 455: Organizational Sociology week one lecture - SOC 455: Organizational Sociology week one lecture by Egghead Travel 644 views 5 years ago 28 minutes - Week one lecture.

Legitimate Power - is the power that is accepted by the people in a society as being necessary and beneficial, such as the power to make and enforce rules that benefit all.

Coercion/ Illegitimate Power - power that is regarded as illegitimate by those over whom it is exerted.

Bureaucracy- (Weber's definition) a rational legal form of authority - modern bureaucratic authority-governed by a set of impersonal rules and procedures that are applied universally, without regard to the personal characteristics of individuals and rationally designed to serve some broader purpose.

Weber's three kinds of authority: 1 Legal-Rational Authority 2 Traditional Authority 3 Charismatic Authority understanding that specific individuals have clearly defined rights and duties to uphold and implement rules and procedures impersonally.

2 Traditional Authority - is authority rooted in the assumption that the customs of the past legitimate the present.

As long as tradition is followed, these rulers may be able to keep power.

Charismatic Authority - derives from a ruler's ability to inspire passion and devotion among his/her followers.

1 Followers perceive a leader as somehow supernatural or divinely inspired.

Charismatic leaders almost always possess outstanding speaking ability and seem to or do perform extraordinary feats.

Frederick Winslow Taylor (1856 to 1915)

Scientific management - The study and application of tested methods to increase productivity by helping workers to work "smarter" - more efficiently, not necessarily harder.

Taylor observed several phenomena among workers in a business organization like a factory

Speed-up - If an individual works too hard at any time, management requires all members of the group to work to that standard all the time, but without a pay increase. The process required of other workers (by management) to match the pace of a faster working individual.

Rate cutting - Those paid by the number of products produced, per product, would now be paid a lower rate per unit.

Taylor proposed the importance of creating incentives for workers to improve their productivity....

Special incentives - Managers provide incentives to workers to motivate them - put forward their best initiative - to produce at a greater pace and/or better quality. These could be promotions, wage increases, etc.

Initiative and incentive management system - one in which the workers give their best initiative and management provides sufficient special incentive.

Mechanistic systems - are those in which centralized decision making, specialization, sharply defines duties, formal rules and hierarchical control are efficient ways to organize routine and repetitive activity in a predictable

Organic systems - are those in which the structure of firms are more loose, job definitions and boundaries between functions are more flexible, rules are less formalized, employees exercise more discretion, and hierarchy is less pronounced.

2. Woodward - Theorist Joan Woodward (covered in your book) later observed that most modern organizations are organic systems. Mechanistic systems are a part of the period in which previous theorists lived, and reflect the Industrial Revolution's organizations - now
