1. Only Oversubscribed Businesses Make a Profit: This principle highlights the importance of being in demand to achieve a profitable business, much like how the stock market works.
2. Your People Are the Only Ones That Matter: Treat buyers as individuals with unique needs and values, moving them from being part of the market to being part of your market.
3. First, You Make Your Market; Then, Make Your Sales: This means building an audience of people who are interested in solving a particular problem. You can do this using a waitlist and showcasing your products or services through innovative marketing strategies and campaigns before focusing on sales.
4. Meeting People Where They Are: This principle is about connecting with potential customers by understanding their values and aligning your products or services accordingly.
5. People Buy When The Conditions Are Right: Combine logic, emotion, and the fear of missing out to create compelling reasons for customers to buy.
6. People Buy What Others Want to Buy: Show that your product is in demand. Social proof and transparency about your product's demand will increase its appeal.
7. People Don't Spend Big Money on Small Problems: Position your business as a solution to significant problems to highlight why you charge a higher fee.
8. People Are Not Proactive: It's not your audience's responsibility to buy from you. It's yours. Take ownership of the sales process as customers are unlikely to take the first step on their own.
9. The Power Is In The Ecosystems: Develop complementary products or services that solve customer problems and create an ecosystem around your offering.
10. Remarkable budgets beat marketing budgets: Allocating budgets to make your product or service significantly stand out in its market.
11. Set Your own rules: Establish a unique selling proposition and set clear rules for your customers that align with your company's values. Don't be afraid to be different.
12. Business is a Team Sport: Business success is a team effort, and it's important to high people to come along for the ride. You cannot do this alone.
