THE MAN WHO WAS RECKLESSLY CURIOUS

Lothario gets married to Camilla

Question for us: 1. Did Lothario run an experiment? 2. If the answer is "no," then what is an experiment? 3. What makes an experiment informative?

Comparable: Psychological study done by Zimbardo, called the Stanford Prison Experiments... where two groups (prisoners vs. guards) were very strongly encouraged to treat each other in a cruel Physical difference does not always lead to psychological difference Field: Psycho-physics (beginning of cognitive psychology)

The experimental method gives the appearance of science, without necessarily having scientific rigor (Example: Jung's experiment with 10 words) (Another example: Diederik Staple's "faking sciences A true story of academic fraud", translated by Nicholas J.L. Brown)

A. Experimental psychology's approach puts too much emphasis on individuality in explaining behavior (they disconnect the individual from the social environment)

What people do depends on what is available to them! Culture makes some behaviors available in some situations. Culture also encourages/ discourages some behaviors in some situations.

A culture is not uniform... It has different parts leg.poor side and the rich side of the culture . A rich person will seek medical care very soon after a mild symptom: A poor person will not seek medical care even when they are seriously il

A culture is not uniform... It has different parts (eg.poor side and the rich side of the culture). A rich person will seek medical care very soon after a mild symptom: A poor person will not seek medical care even when they are seriously il

Experimenters usually ignore external validity (if the same pattern of findings will be found in a real-life situation)

Experimenters ignore the looping effect (Ian Hacking) - findings can change the behavior of people who learn about them.

Summary: Experimental psychology is successful in giving the appearance of scientific rigor, and in producing results that are repeatable and reliable. However, there are debates and disagreements about the validity of experimental results, their relevance to real human life, and what they miss based on their assumptions about individualism (isolated minds) and causality.
