Before compasses, people navigated by looking at stars, landmarks, migrating birds, and waves. China's Han dynasty produced the first ever compass around 200 BCE.

These compasses contained magnetite - a naturally magnetic mineral.

Needle compasses came decades later, guiding Chinese sailors across the seas.

The compass is considered one of China's four great inventions.

It pushed forward map-making techniques in the 13th century.

It guided explorers through previously uncharted waters, and deftly back to their home ports

And it helped usher in the first globes, advancing our knowledge of the planet.

In the 1980s, the US military released GPS to the public.
