Unlike some other reproductions of classic texts (1) We have not used OCR (Optical Character Recognition), as this leads to bad quality books with introduced typos. (2) In books where there are images such as portraits, maps, sketches etc We have endeavoured to keep the quality of these images, so they represent accurately the original artefact. Although occasionally there may be certain imperfections with these old texts, we feel they deserve to be made available for future generations to enjoy.

Excerpt from The Literary Digest, Vol. 20: A Weekly Compendium of the Contemporaneous Thought of the World; January, 1900 June, 1900 The two young students talked over their ambitions. They often helped each other on a picture, each painting certain things in it. They soon decided to leave the beaten track of art. They concluded that Raphael, the idol of art, had many imperfections. They would take nature as their only guide and go directly to her for inspiration. They called this pre-raphaelitism. Literary Digest

This volume of the National Political Science Review, the official publication of the National Political Science Association, is anchored by a major symposium on The Politics of the Black "Nation," the book authored by Matthew Holden in 1973, which is now considered one of the most influential books in the field of black politics. Twenty-five years provide a sufficient timespan on which to base a retrospective of the book and simultaneously to reflect upon the evolution of the black liberation struggle, more formally called, African American politics. In the present age, there is not much talk about "a black nation," certainly not as was heard during the 1960s and mid-1970s. Yet there is a persistent sense of separateness in that there is constant thought and talk of "Black America" as a significantly separate communal entity. Black Americans are seen as a racially and culturally distinct community holding to social, political, economic interests which have special significance and poignancy for them. Holden's perception of the nature of the times in the early seventies stands in sharp contrast to how contemporary analysts of African American politics tend to perceive the nature of African Americans' role in political life and their position in American society in the present age. In this retrospective, readers have the opportunity to get a sense of what Holden argued of the seven essays that make up his seminal volume and to consider how well Holden's observations have stood the tests of time. In addition to the essays presented at the symposium, which pointedly discuss Holden's work, there are essays dealing with "African American Politics in Constancy and Change," by contributors including Charles Henry, David Covin, Robert C. Smith, Clyde Lusane, Cheryl Miller, D'Linell Finley, and Sekou Franklin, among others. Other features are a highly informative discussion of the Literary Digest magazine's Straw-Vote Presidential Polls, 1916-1936, and a review essay by Peter Ronaye in which he discusses "America as 'New World' Power: U.S. Foreign Policy in the Post-Cold War Era." The volume concludes with fifteen book reviews by knowledgeable scholars. The Politics of the Black "Nation" is a timely, thought-provoking volume. It will be of immense value to ethnic studies specialists, African American studies scholars, political scientists, historians, and sociologists. Georgia A. Persons is professor in the School of Public Policy at the Georgia Institute of Technology and the current editor of the National Political Science Review.

The Literary Digest, Vol. 70

An excerpt from The Literary Digest, Volume 7: SINCE Mr. Lowell's death, a small volume has been published entitled, "The Old English Dramatists," consisting of the notes he prepared for six lectures delivered during the spring of 1887, at the Lowell Institute, in Boston. In the delivery, these notes, it appears, were supplemented by a good deal of extemporaneous matter," suggested by the passages from the plays selected for illustrations of the discourse." This extemporaneous matter has not been preserved. The six lectures are devoted to Marlowe, Webster, Chapman, Beaumont and Fletcher,

Massinger and Ford. Notwithstanding the somewhat fragmentary nature of its contents, the volume has been very well received. Mr. W. H. Johnson, in The Denison Quarterly (Granville, Ohio), says of the Lectures: "They will be searched in vain for any hint of the approaching dissolution of his powers. The same keen insight, the same flow of humor, the same love of the beautiful and good, and the same hatred of the wrong which have marked his whole career, are here in the fullness of their development. Posthumous publications are not, as a rule, fortunate, but the fame of Lowell can suffer no ill from the perusal of these lectures." In a laudatory notice of the book, The Examiner (New York) thus describes its nature: "The method followed in discussing these writers is conspicuously informal. No attempt is made to exhaust the subject, or to be scientific, or to develop a theory, except it be the theory that what is once beautiful is always so. There is something of Lamb's delightful diffuseness in these talks, and certainly Lowell's motive in speaking his mind was identical with Lamb's—a sincere love of his theme, and long familiarity with it." The book seems to be not less acceptable on the other side of the Atlantic. The Spectator (London), in the course of an analysis of the volume of some length, makes these observations: "The Lectures before us have not had the advantage of Mr. Lowell's revision; but they do not perceptibly suffer from the want of it, and the reader who turns to them with interest for the author's sake will find his compensation in their intrinsic worth. Mr. Lowell's judgments, it is needless to say, are thoroughly independent, and his appreciation of the poets whom he criticises never runs into extravagance. Mr. Swinburne's generous, though not indiscriminate, praise of Ford is not echoed by Mr. Lowell, who considers his plays chiefly remarkable "for that filagree work of sentiment which we call sentimentality." Ford abounds, the lecturer thinks, in mock pathos, but he confesses that in his youth he was thoroughly imposed on by him."
