Information Literacy in the Real World

Preparing Students for the Future

CREATED BY: VANESSA GAROFALO, MLIS

We live in a world where information is always at our fingertips.

connect with family and friends and share our experiences with others.

We can even learn about current events.

Information overload can make life difficult.

College is the ideal time for students to learn how to use information.

Once they step out into the real world and into a career these skills become essential for things like...

buying their first home

preparing financially for their future

No matter what type of job students pursue...

or how hard they work...

Information Literacy skills will be necessary for effective communication and collaboration.

Those who don't learn these skills risk a different outcome.

As educators, we are equipped to help students learn these lifelong skills so that they become successful consumers of information.
