

Line Bisection In Simulated Homonymous Hemianopia

#line bisection #homonymous hemianopia #simulated visual impairment #visual field defect #neuropsychology research

Explore the fascinating insights into line bisection tasks conducted under conditions of simulated homonymous hemianopia. This research investigates how individuals with a visual field defect adapt their perceptual strategies, offering crucial data for understanding neuropsychology research and potential visual rehabilitation approaches.

Gaze scanning and detection failures

Summary: motorcycles at intersections • Wide range in blind side detection rates

Why might people with hemianopia fail to scan sufficiently to the blind side?

Auditory reminder cues to scan

Maximum gaze eccentricity to blind side

Maximum head eccentricity to blind side

Why was head scan magnitude predictive of detection?

Parameters to define an early large scan • Both gaze and head scan magnitude were predictive of detection before the intersection on the blind side
