Excerpt from A Translation Into English Verse of Virgil's Fourth Georgic Each slender chink, and every margin try To fill with flowers and bee-glue; thus a hoard Of gluten thick for this is always stored, Gluten more binding than the bird-lime rich, More binding too than Phrygian Ida's pitch. Oft too their hive they dig beneath the ground Their Lares here and ties of home are found; If tales be true, in hollow rocks they live, And in the trunks of trees they rear their hive. The gaping crannies thou must smear with clay, And likewise o'er the hive thin foliage lay. You must not yew trees near their precincts keep, Boil not red crabs, trust not the stamms deep, Nor fetid smells, nor hollowed rocks, whence sounds The unseen nymph, and speech re-ected bounds. When golden suns drive winter from the sight, And then unveil the sky with glowing light. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. The Georgics of Virgil in Four Books. Translated [in Verse] by J. M. King

The Oxford History of Classical Reception (OHCREL) is designed to offer a comprehensive investigation of the numerous and diverse ways in which literary texts of the classical world have stimulated responses and refashioning by English writers. Covering the full range of English literature from the early Middle Ages to the present day, OHCREL both synthesizes existing scholarship and presents cutting-edge new research, employing an international team of expert contributors for each of the five volumes. OHCREL endeavours to interrogate, rather than inertly reiterate, conventional assumptions about literary 'periods', the processes of canon-formation, and the relations between literary and non-literary discourse. It conceives of 'reception' as a complex process of dialogic exchange and, rather than offering large cultural generalizations, it engages in close critical analysis of literary texts. It explores in detail the ways in which English writers' engagement with classical literature casts as much light on the classical originals as it does on the English writers' own cultural context. This second volume, and third to appear in the series, covers the years 1558-1660, and explores the reception of the ancient genres and authors in English Renaissance literature, engaging with the major, and many of the minor, writers of the period, including Shakespeare, Marlowe, Spenser, and Jonson. Separate chapters examine the Renaissance institutions and contexts which shape the reception of antiquity, and an annotated bibliography provides substantial material for further reading.

Virgil's Husbandry

Excerpt from The Georgics of Virgil: Books I., II The prosaic science of the farmyard would not at first sight seem to present a promising basis for the poet's art. Yet Virgil undertook the task with evident pleasure, and accomplished it with an ease that is the despair of his translators. Nor can it be said that he shrinks in any way from the difficulties in his path. He attacks the commonplaces of the subject with equal courage and success. He deals with the ordinary methods of tillage and forestry, of cattle-breeding and bee-keeping, with an abundant detail and an almost scientific precision.
