ORGANIZATIONAL LEARNING STRATEGIES

The purpose of organizational learning is to get agencies thinking about what and how they are doing LEARNING Organizational learning concerns these processes.

SUPPORT The second issue is getting support from within one's own unit, higher levels of management, and rival departments.

POLICIES In recent years, a number of organizational practices and policies have evolved that encourage departments and work units to engage in learning, creativity, and change.

ASKING A very simple and effective approach is asking employees, as individuals and as groups, to submit ideas for improving their own work, that of their work units, or that of the agency.

EXPERIMENTING Organizations are still experimenting with different ways of getting new ideas and initiatives from their employees and managers.

LEADERS Any system is only as good as its leaders, so how leaders and managers are selected and evaluated matters greatly in determining the nature of an organization.
