The People Versus the Liquor Traffic

Excerpt from The People Versus the Liquor Traffic: The Great Speeches of John B. Finch No apology need be offered for presenting this volume to the public. The present is an exceedingly interesting period in the history of the temperance movement. Evidence that the labors of the past half century have not been in vain, was never more abundant. This may be regarded as the era of constitutional prohibition. In the year 1850 Michigan incorporated into her state constitution a provision prohibiting the granting of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors; and in the year 1851 Ohio placed a similar provision in her constitution. It was then thought that this would be all that would be needed. Subsequent experience has shown this to be an error. Nothing short of absolute prohibition will answer the requirements of the case. The People Versus the Liquor Traffic

Excerpt from The People Versus the Liquor Traffic: Speeches of John B. Finch, Delivered in the Prohibition Campaigns of the United States and Canada The alcoholic quor traffic is an old institution, and the charges urged against it are that its whole results debauch and degrade society. The Prohibitionists say that it is a school of crime, vice, and immorality; and that a republican form of government, based on intelli gence and morality, must destroy the traffic to pre serve its own existence. These charges are grave ones, and if sustained no excuse can be Offered for allowing the traffic to continue. The question is one of fact. Is the traffic guilty? DO Prohibitionists tell the truth? The jury to determine the matter must be the people, because in free America all political power 18 Inherent. The People Versus the Liquor Traffic

This book is a scathing analysis of the liquor traffic in British India, and the British Government's role in regulating it. The author argues that the government has failed in its duty, and presents a compelling case for greater regulation and oversight. This book is essential for anyone interested in the history of British India, alcohol regulation, and social justice. The People Versus the Liquor Traffic

Excerpt from A Thoughtful Article for Thoughtful People on Prohibition and Local Option: Together With Methods Suggested for the Regulation of the Liquor Traffic and for the Promotion of Temperance Liquor legislation must necessarily follow one of two general policies. It may aim at the abolition of the liquor traffic, or at the regulation of the traffic. These two policies are extreme Opposites at every point and in every feature. The object of one is to kill, that of the other is to cure. It is on this broad question of general policy that the people are divided today. No. Legislative system has ever been more extensively nor fairly tested than that of prohibition. During the last sixty years it has been tried on the statewide scale in many different sections of the country and under the most diverse social and political conditions, the periods of trial ranging from three years in Nebraska to fifty-three years in Vermont. By its record, by what it has done and by what it has not done, prohibition must be judged. On every page of that record, from beginning to end, are written the words failure, folly, farce. Nowhere and at no time, in all its history, has prohibition accomplished a single one of its avowed objects. Nowhere has it abolished the liquor traffic; nowhere has it prevented the consumption of liquor nor lessened the evil of intemperance. Neither as a state-wide system nor under Local Option has prohibition ever made the slightest contribution toward the solution of the liquor problem. 'The one solitary service that it has rendered to society is that of furnishing a warning example of the supreme folly of attempting to legislate virtue into men's lives. The People Versus the Liquor Traffic

Excerpt from The Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic Personal liberty, the true and false. Society has the right to limit personal liberty. Absolute personal liberty does not exist. Mutual concessions required in society. The good of society, the supremelaw. Society must protect the individual. Owes the individual protection from the deception and ruin of strong drink. Owes protection to itself from the depredations of the drinker. May abate a nuisance. Such as the saloon. The out-cry against Sumptuary legislation. Strong drink not food in any proper sense. It is taken as a dissipation, and as a concomitant of low vices.

Prohibition removes the bottle of wine from the dinner table, The danger of wine at table. Entrenched in social customs. Rights are constantly limited in other matters for the good of society, why not here? Personal liberty must be subordinate to the public good. Page 74.
