Introduction of Reframing History Project by John Dichtl (AASLH)

Introduction of Panelists by Anthea Hartig

How do we bring together all of the different people doing history and harness that energy?

How do we use this moment of history becoming a lightning rod of political discourse?

What does it mean for us to do history at a time when there is tension in how people are engaging with more accessible primary source material?

In using the Reframing History report, how do we ensure that equity and justice are represented?

How do we reconcile an American history that tells everyone's story and in which everyone is reflected, with a shared and unified national narrative? Can we have both?
