Introduction

What is Circling?

Intimate connections that happens quickly

The opportunities for intimacy that get missed in daily life

Naming the experience of the present moment in conversation

The power of focusing everyone's attention on one person's experience

Vulnerably sharing out loud your impression of the other person

Using the whole body as an instrument for listening

What a Circle looks like

How a Circle begins to deepen

The first 3 stages of the 7-stage model of Circling

How deep conversation leads to greater self-awareness

Being a "warrior" FOR someone: helping them see what hasn't been seen
Feeling what hasn't been felt before
The transference of emotion from speaker to listener
How shared intimacy builds a new kind of community
Repairing connection after someone gets missed in the conversation
Vulnerability and authenticity require practice!
What is revealed on the other side of feeling what wasn't felt before
A level of empathy most people have never felt which leads to new possibilities
The "midwife" stage: the birth of something new; a new "occurring view"
Reconnecting to lost parts of oneself
How deep intimacy leads to shared resonance and inner nourishment
How Circling leads to a new capacity for understanding the experience of others
What happened to Seth on a subway train in Harlem twenty years ago
Jon starts Circling me!
Integrating the new insights, sensations and emotions discovered in the Circle
Recognizing the voice of the inner critic, substituting the "voice of love"
Jon describes how we navigated between stages as he was Circling me
The "Warrior Mantra": "Pause. Right there. What's that?!"
... elegantly completing an intimate conversation, ...
Seth and Jon share appreciation for the dialogue
An invitation to experience the practice of Circling
