And that Is Very Telling I Think for Us in the United States One of the Themes in My Book Is that You Know if We Were To Have a President Who Wanted To Erode Democracy and Was a Lawyer and Smart You Know What Our Constitution Save Us that's the Question the Book and the Answer Is No Absolutely Not in Fact the Constitution Facilitates Democratic Erosion and One of the Ways It Does that Is It Gives Textually the Power of Governing Elections to Partisan Bodies to State Legislatures so that this African Court You Know It's Done Something Which the United States Supreme Court Has Not Done and Will Not Do

So What I Want To Do Is Talk a Little Bit about that Actually Mostly about the Piece and Then Introduce some Questions about Internet Governance Where the Un Is Virtually Non-Existent in in Many Respects so the Piece Itself like Others Have Remarked on Other Work of David's It's Exceptional on Many Levels He Honed In on a Particularly Critical Problem at What He Called a Pivotal Point in History He Situates an Enduring Question Why Is the Security Council's Legitimacy if Not Authority Persistently under Threat Even at a Moment of Apparent Success Right It Was 1993 People Thought It Was this Was Sort of the New World the Kind of Era

He Analyzes and Then Concludes that Yes It Matters and in Order To Bolster Its Legitimacy the Security Council Must Must Change but Even in His Call for Change Again I Think a Highlight of His Scholarship It Is Measured and It Is Cognizant of the Realities of International Politics He's both He's both Idealistic and Realistic in the Same in the Same Breath Really Which I Think Was Remarkable and and Hard to It's Hard To Pull Off and He Did It So I Want To Use David's Framework Which Again I'M GonNa Drill It Drill Down into in a Moment I Want To Use His Framework To Suggest some Answers to another Question although Probably More Raised Questions than Provide Answers and It's Also as His Was in 1993 a Contemporary Question

Why Is that Not Found Traction in the Typical Places of Governance like the International Telecommunications Union the Un General Assembly and Elsewhere by Contrast Why Have the Existing Models Been So Attractive Not Only to Civil Society and to the Come and to Companies but to a Vast Majority of States Actually So Let Me Begin with David's Article and Then I'll Turn to Internet Governance Questions so David Begins with some Basic Observations Approaching Legitimacy in Social and Political Terms He Observes that while Illegitimate Claims Reflect Subjective Conclusions Perhaps Based on Unarticulated Notions about What Is Fair and Just They May Also Reflect Genuine Dissatisfaction with an Organization

So David Begins with some Basic Observations Approaching Legitimacy in Social and Political Terms He Observes that while Illegitimate Claims Reflect Subjective Conclusions Perhaps Based on Unarticulated Notions about What Is Fair and Just They May Also Reflect Genuine Dissatisfaction with an Organization and I Think this Was Quintessentially David Right so He Asks Us To Look with Good-Faith Right behind a Claim That May Be Difficult To Sustain as an Objective Legal Matter Why Are People Making a Claim That's Important to Him Regardless of whether the Claim Ultimately Holds Up as a Matter of Law the Claim Itself May Reflect Something Problematic in Our Politics and in Our Law Even if the Legal Claim Would Fail

And He Goes On To Say One Must Seek an Institution That Simultaneously Can Employ Its Authority Effectively and Employs It in a Manner That Is Regarded Generally as Legitimate the Challenge He Says Is To Seek Designs That Promote Institutional Integrity and that Consequently Address in the Ordinary Course of Business the Circumstances That Make Possible the Resonance of Illegitimate See so He Identifies Four Basic Ways in Which We Might Think of of Legitimacy How Do We Imagine that a State or that an Organization Might Be Seen because Perceptions in the Piece Are Very Important Might Be Seen as Acting with Integrity

See so He Identifies Four Basic Ways in Which We Might Think of of Legitimacy How Do We Imagine that a State or that an Organization Might Be Seen because Perceptions in the Piece Are Very Important Might Be Seen as Acting with Integrity and He Identifies Four Four Factors One Is Does the Organization and Trust Its Operation Two Persons Who Can Claim Independence of those Who Are Governed and Two Have no Interest in a Particular Outcome Secondly What Is the Accountability of States That Are Entrusted with the Operation of the Organization Is There any Accountability Third Is There any Third Party Accountability Mechanism like a Court or an Independent Institution To Evaluate Claims of Legitimacy or Illegitimacy Then Forth He Says Integrity May Be Promoted by Providing the Opportunity for Representative Participation
