Organizational communication is the exchange of information among two or more individuals or groups in an organization.

Downward communication occurs when higher- level employees communicate to those at lower levels the organization.

Horizontal communication occurs when someone in an organization communicates with others at the same organizational level.

When employees communicate across departments and levels, they are engaging in diagonal communication.

Formal communications are official, organization- sanctioned communications.

A social network is the set of relationships among people connected through friendship, family, work, or other ties.

ORGANIZATIONS The organizations that define who we are-and our relationships to them have become increasingly complicated. Indeed, as systems of communication, we largely take for granted organizations and their roles in our lives.

One purpose is to provide you with a map to navigate the water we all swim in and to figure out the complexities of organizational communication processes.

Given the power and influence of organizations in contemporary society, it is important to understand organizational communication as a process that is inescapably linked to the exercise of power

Power is a defining feature of everyday organizational life, and an issue with which all perspectives on organizational communication must grapple.

Power is to organizations as oxygen is to breathing
