John Thompson (1995), The Media And Modernity,, ...
John Thompson wanted to reconstruct historically the way in which the process of globalisation has taken hold The second consideration concerns the relation between the structured patterns of global communication
As globalisation of communication becomes more intense the significance of its axis increases
Circulation of information and communication has become increasingly global while, the process of appropriation remains inherently contextual.
The growing availability of mediated symbolic materials may not only enrich the process of self-formation; can also have a disorienting effect.
