How did you come to focus your research on social policy and income inequality?

What was the specific question you were trying to answer in your book Unequal Democracy?

What were the steps and methods you used in your research?

What were your conclusions in Unequal Democracy? Were you surprised by them?

Based on your research, is it fair to say that Democratic administrations do a better job with economic inequality than Republican ones?

What does your work in Unequal Democracy tell us about policy issues debated today?

If Democrats, historically, more often support policies aimed to help middle class and poor people, why do middle class and poor people often support Republican candidates?

Why would people support tax breaks when those breaks provide larger benefits for wealthier people than for themselves?

What will you be investigating next with your research?

How did you decide on a career in political science?
