Selections From the World's Devotional Classics, Vol. 7 of 10

Excerpt from Selections From the World's Devotional Classics, Vol. 1 of 10: Tobit to Chrysostom This series of ten volumes is a response to demands indicated by religious developments during recent years. These developments seemed to suggest as timely a gemen and selection from Christian sources of devotional utterances suitable for private and public use. Revolt and protest against a materialistic trend in practical life has been shown by re vived interest in mysticism, in that life that is seated in the inmost recesses of the spirit. Recurrent revivals are symptomatic of a sense of deep need, expression of which calls for guidance. Many devout Christians have felt increasingly the limitations of inelastic litur gies, and have desired a larger range of avail able sources, consecrated by essential worth, for expression of aspiration, praise, and peti tion. On the other hand, the infelicities often attending non-liturgical worship suggest the advantage of help and guidance in the expres sion and form of worship. Nineteen centuriespater. SELECTIONS FROM THE mediations of Dftrfne Lobe fjetoeO to 6(c)ot&er 3luUana of jQorim'cb 1373 JULIANA OF NORWICH English mystic, author of "Revelations of Divine Love"; born near Norwich in 1342; said to have been "yet in life" in 1442. She became a recluse in an anchorage attached to the Church of St. Julian of Norwich. In the first chapter of her "Revelations" she says: "This is a revelation of love, that Jesu Christ our endless blisse made in xvi. shewings." In the second chapter she says: "This revelation was made to a simple creature unlettered, living in deadlie flesh, the year of our Lord, a thousand three hundreth lxxiiij, the xiiijth daie of Maie: which creature desired before three gifts by the grace of God. 'The first was mind of the passion.' 'The second was bodilie sickness.' 'The third was to have of God's gift three woundes, ... that is to say, the wound of verie contrition, the wound of kind compassion, and the wound of willful longing to God'" The book is a record of twenty years' meditation on these experiences. More than fifteen years later she received "in ghostly understanding" the key to the interpretation of her religious experiences: "What? wouldst thou wit thy Lord's meaning in this thing? Wit it well: Love was his meaning. Who sheweth it thee? Love. Wherefore sheweth he it thee? For love. Hold thee therein, thou shalt wit more in the same. But thou shalt never wit therein other without end." preface The first five chapters sum up the contents of the "Sixteen Revelations," give the circumstances (severe illness) and time (1373) in which they were received, indicate that they were mediated through the sight of the crucifix held before her during and after the administration of the Church's last rites, and.

For myself, thy unworthy servant, I will bless thee while I live, that in the decline of my days thou art giving me to enjoy the leisure and serenity of a peaceful retreat, where by pious meditation and fervent prayer, a ready submission to thy providence, and a growing complacency in thy works, the constant exercise of good will toward men, and the elevating hope of the gospel, I may double my diligence to prepare for the inevitable hour. And when it shall arrive, grant, most merciful Father, through the mediation of my divine Master and only Savior, that I may obtain an easy passage from this to a happier region, and be admitted to worship thee in the temples of eternity. Letters of Faith Through the Seasons: December-May Excerpt from From the World's Devotional Classics, Vol. 4 of 10: Theologica Germanica to Leighton But one might say, Now since the Perfect can not be known nor apprehended of any creature but the soul is a creature, how can it be known by the soul Answer: This is why we say, 'by the soul as a creature.' We mean it is impossible to the creature in virtue of its creature-nature and qualities, that by which it saith I and myse For in whatsoever creature the Perfect shall be known, therein creature-nature, qualities, the I, the self and the like, must all be lost and done away. This is the meaning of that saying of St. Paul: When that which is per fect is come (that is, when it is known), then that which is in part (to wit, creature nature, qualities, the I, the self, the mine) will be despised and counted for naught. So long as we think much of these things, cleave to them with love, joy, pleasure or desire, so long remaineth the Perfect unknown to us. Providing insight in a family's history against the backdrop of major world wars, Buster's Book offers a collection of more than a thousand letters exchanged during the twentieth century as young men provided service to their country. In this memoir, author Donald Junkins has compiled letters, diaries, interviews, recollections, and photographs of the family's participants in both world wars and the Korean and Vietnam wars. This fascinating historical record includes the stories of a variety of escapades: from single-handedly opening an eight-year-old Nazi prison c& to B-24 air forays from New Guinea in which an aerial gunner shot down two Japanese Zero planes; and to the rescue in Korea of wounded men stalled in a jeep in the middle of a freezing river that culminated in the awarding of the Silver Star. Buster's Book reflects both the lives of a middle-class American family during these years and the daily activities of two generations of young American men at war.

Great Devotional Classics

Volume VI (of X) - Great Britain and Ireland Ever since civilized man has had a literature he has apparently sought to make selections from it and thus put his favorite passages together in a compact and convenient form. Certain it is, at least, that to the Greeks, masters in all great arts, we owe this habit. They made such collections and named them, after their pleasant imaginative fashion, a gathering of flowers, or what we, borrowing their word, call an anthology. So to those austere souls who regard anthologies as a labor-saving contrivance for the benefit of persons who like a smattering of knowledge and are never really learned, we can at least plead in mitigation that we have high and ancient authority for the practise. In any event no amount of scholarly deprecation has been able to turn mankind or that portion of mankind which reads books from the agreeable habit of making volumes of selections and finding in them much pleasure, as well as improvement in taste and knowledge. With the spread of education and with the great increase of literature among all civilized nations, more especially since the invention of printing and its vast multiplication of books, the making of volumes of selections comprizing what is best in one's own or in many literatures is no longer a mere matter of taste or convenience as with the Greeks, but has become something little short of a necessity in this world of many workers, comparatively few scholars, and still fewer intelligent men of leisure. Anthologies have been multiplied like all other books, and in the main they have done much good and no harm. The man who thinks he is a scholar or highly educated because he is familiar with what is collected in a well-chosen anthology, of course, errs grievously. Such familiarity no more makes one a master of literature than a perusal of a dictionary makes the reader a master of style. But as the latter pursuit can hardly fail to enlarge a man's vocabulary, so the former adds to his knowledge, increases his stock of ideas, liberalizes his mind and opens to him new sources of enjoyment. The Greek habit was to bring together selections of verse, passages of especial merit, epigrams and short poems. In the main their example has been followed. From their days down to the "Elegant Extracts in Verse" of our grandmothers and grandfathers, and thence on to our own time with its admirable "Golden Treasury" and "Oxford Handbook of Verse," there has been no end to the making of poetical anthologies and apparently no diminution in the public appetite for them. Poetry indeed lends itself to selection. Much of the best poetry of the world is contained in short poems, complete in themselves, and capable of transference bodily to a volume of selections. There are very few poets of whose quality and genius a fair idea can not be given by a few judicious selections. A large body of noble and beautiful poetry, of verse which is "a joy forever," can also be given in a very small compass. And the mechanical attribute of size, it must be remembered, is very important in making a successful anthology, for an essential quality of a volume of selections is that it should be easily portable, that it should be a book which can be slipped into the pocket and readily carried about in any wanderings whether near or remote. An anthology which is stored in one or more huge and heavy volumes is practically valueless except to those who have neither books nor access to a public library, or who think that a stately tome printed on calendered paper and "profusely illustrated" is an ornament to a center-table in a parlor rarely used except on solemn or official occasions. I have mentioned these advantages of verse for the purposes of an anthology in order to show the difficulties which must be encountered in making a prose selection. Very little prose is in small parcels which can be transferred entire, and therefore with the very important attribute of completeness, to a volume of selections. From most of the great prose writers it is necessary to take extracts, and the chosen passage is broken off from what comes before and after. The fame of a great prose writer as a rule rests on a book, and really to know him the book must be read and not merely passages from it. Extracts give no very satisfactory idea of "Paradise Lost" or "The Divine Comedy," and the same is true of extracts from a history or a novel. It is possible by spreading prose selections through a series of small volumes to overcome the mechanical difficulty and thus make the selections in form what they ought above all things to be—companions and not books of reference or table decorations. But the spiritual or literary problem is not so easily overcome. What prose to take and where to take it are by no means easy questions to solve. Yet they are well worth solving, so far as patient effort can do it, for in this period of easy printing it is desirable to put in convenient form before those who read examples of the masters which will draw us back from the perishing chatter of the moment to the literature which is the highest work of civilization and which is at once noble and lasting. Upon that theory this collection has been formed. It is an attempt to give examples from all periods and languages of Western civilization of what is best and most memorable in their prose literature. That the result is not a complete exhibition of the time and the literatures covered by the selections no one is better aware than the editors. Inexorable conditions of space make a certain degree of incompleteness inevitable when he who is gathering flowers traverses so vast a garden, and is obliged to confine the results of his labors within such narrow bounds. The editors are also fully conscious that, like all other similar collections, this one too will give rise to the familiar criticism and questionings as to why such a passage was omitted and such another inserted; why this writer was chosen and that other passed by. In literature we all have our favorites, and even the most catholic of us has also his dislikes if not his pet aversions. I will frankly confess that there are authors represented in these volumes whose writings I should avoid, just as there are certain towns and cities of the world to which, having once visited them, I would never willingly return, for the simple reason that I would not voluntarily subject myself to seeing or reading what I dislike or, which is worse, what bores and fatigues me. But no editor of an anthology must seek to impose upon others his own tastes and opinions. He must at the outset remember and never afterward forget that so far as possible his work must be free from the personal equation. He must recognize that some authors who may be mute or dull to him have a place in literature, past or present, sufficiently assured to entitle them to a place among selections which are intended above all things else to be representative. To those who wonder why some favorite bit of their own was omitted while something else for which they do not care at all has found a place I can only say that the editors, having suppress their own personal preferences, have proceeded on certain general principles which seem to be essential in making any selection either of verse or prose which shall possess broader and more enduring qualities than that of being a mere exhibition of the editor's personal taste. To illustrate my meaning: Emerson's "Parnassus" is extremely interesting as an exposition of the tastes and preferences of a remarkable man of great and original genius. As an anthology it is a failure, for it is of awkward size, is ill arranged and contains selections made without system, and which in many cases baffle all attempts to explain their appearance. On the other hand, Mr. Palgrave, neither a very remarkable man nor a great and original genius, gave us in the first "Golden Treasury" a collection which has no interest whatever as reflecting the tastes of the editor, but which is quite perfect in its kind. Barring the disproportionate amount of Wordsworth which includes some of his worst things—and which, be it said in passing, was due to Mr. Palgrave's giving way at that point to his personal enthusiasm—the "Golden Treasury" in form, in scope, and in arrangement, as well as in almost unerring taste, is the best model of what an anthology should be which is to be found in any language.

Nestes estudos expositivos sobre o livro de Êxodo, Philip Graham Ryken explora a história da fuga de Israel do Egito para o conhecimento do caráter e instrução de Deus para seus seguidores. Teologicamente instrutivo e decididamente pastoral, este comentário leva os leitores a se alegrar com a obra de Deus na vida de cada pessoa que o segue no caminho da liberdade espiritual. Ryken habilmente relata como a libertação dos israelitas da escravidão antecipou a salvação realizada em Jesus Cristo, provando que Deus se lembra de sua aliança e cumpre sempre suas promessas. Para aqueles que pregam, ensinam e estudam a Palavra de Deus, este livro é mais do que apenas um comentário; é uma celebração da fidelidade de Deus.
