The Hypnotic Salesman

What would it be like if you could walk into a meeting room and hypnotize prospects? Suppose that you could give hypnotic suggestions to the prospect, and the prospect's boss, without anyone knowing? If you have to negotiate a contract, how powerful would you be if you could hypnotize the representatives of the other side into giving you concessions? If you were a salesman, and had to make a sale, how much easier would it be if you could give hypnotic suggestions to the customer that this is the right time to buy? Eventually, we all have to sell something. Suppose you could do all of this without anyone knowing? Right now, Sales Professionals are doing this. Perhaps Sales Professionals who are working against you, right now, are doing this -- and you didn't even know. NLP is a method of giving people hypnotic suggestions in the course of ordinary conversation. You never know you've been hypnotized. This is a book you need in order to use NLP to get sales and contracts that were otherwise impossible. Excerpt from the chapter "Rapport" People are like radios. A radio operates by vibrating at the same frequency as a radio station. If you are happy, people around you tend to be happy. That is why a yawn is infectious. That is why laughter is contagious. That is why an angry man causes others to become angry. A whining person upsets other people. Erickson sometimes used to hypnotize people by getting rapport and then going into trance himself; they would follow. A very great deal of NLP is devoted to ways to get rapport: moving in rhythm with someone, moving yourself when they move themselves (not, mind you, doing a complete I Love Lucy mirror trick where every movement is parroted), because that is disturbing, but simply subliminally matching someone's rhythms, and movements, but not at the same time: 15 or 20 seconds after they move, you move, very subtly. You should also speak to them in the terms they use, and on the things they think are important. Many negotiators-poor negotiators-think it is unnecessary to ask an opponent what they really want, and why. If you ask someone what is important, she will give you the keys to her decisions. You ask what is important, and for each of the things she says is important, you agree with her that it is important, and then you ask, just so you understand exactly how she feels, to soften it a bit so you aren't giving her the Third Degree, what she feels is the most important thing about that. You don't give her an FBI grilling, you gently say you want to understand her, so please help you to understand how she feels. You will have her criteria for what she wants, and you can fit your actions and presentation to those criteria. The books and tapes by Leil Lowndes and Ross Jeffries are especially good at ways to get rapport. If you get rapport, you have most of the battle won: then you lead the other person to the decision you want. Excerpt from the chapter "An Example of Neurolinguistic Programming" "Easily, smoothly, and efficiently" is the next phrase, and it builds on the trance the previous phrase induced. These are "presuppositions." These are words or phrases which to be understood, have to be assumed to be true. So, if I just shout at you, like an army drill instructor, that you can solve your problems with Franz Mesmer, your consciousness might question that. Your consciousness may resist an authoritarian, drill instructor approach. The whole idea of this is to run around conscious resistance. But if I say you can easily solve them, the fact that you can solve them is presupposed. These are also trance phrases, or trance words, which cause you to have to go into a trance to understand them. You have to look inward to understand them, and that's a trance.

There is nobody in the world today using the Power of Suggestion through hypnotic selling quite the way Barker has mastered it. Read it. It will make you a better copywriter, period." -Bob Bly, copywriter and author of The Copywriter's Handbook "I couldn't put this book down. It's eye opening and filled with genuinely new stuff about writing and persuading better. And it communicates it brilliantly and teaches it brilliantly-exemplifying the techniques by the writing of the book itself as you go along." -David Deutsch, author of Think Inside the Box, www.thinkinginside.com "Hypnotic Writing is packed with so much great information it's hard to know where to start. The insights, strategies, and tactics in the book are easy to apply yet deliver one heck of a punch.
