Structural racism is the systematic allocation of resources and opportunity based on race. It refers to the ways that institutions and systems operate together to produce outcomes that differ based on race, even in the absence of racist intent.

From 2015-2017, the Alliance for Innovation on Maternal Health convened a national workgroup. The group reviewed reams of scientific evidence and developed what's known as a care "bundle" - or set of practices - to reduce maternal racial and ethnic disparities in perinatal health.

That bundle was recently published, and provides concrete action steps that clinicians and health systems can take during pregnancy to identify, measure, understand, and begin to make change in racial inequities that occur during pregnancy and childbirth care.
