Intro

Introduction System Design to Standards is ubiquitous in system engineering Standards can be Problems ??? MBSE recognizes Requirements, Functions, Components, etc. System Design based on a set of Requirements • Derived (?) from Standards • Traceability to (multiple Standards) is needed . Even if a Stakeholder / Originating Need states a certain

Objective • Develop a way to capture Standard(s) and their design statements • Provide Traceability... ... to the Standard Document ... to System Design Requirements ... to verification that the system meets the standard

Extending the MODEL Want to include the Standard Requirements in the model • Relate the Standard Requirement to System Requirements . Do so in such a way that we can capture multiple Standards • Support Auditable Traceability . How does the system design comply with a particular standard? • Verify system operation to the standard

Standard Class Properties Attributes included to: provide traceability to standard Section allow for mandatory and optional applicability - Rationale for including the standard

Traceability from a Standard to the System Requirements Taking a given standard, how would we trace from the standard to the System Design?

Traceability from Requirements to Standards Sometimes the question is reversed. From the System Requirements, how would we trace to the standard?

Verification of System Performance Many times you need to show that the system has been tested to ensure compliance with the Standard • The system design repository has traceability from Requirements to • This allows us to trace from the Standard, to the Requirement to the

Summary Extending the nominal MBSE schema to capture the statements from individual Standard documents provides: • Ability to trace system requirements to multiple Standard Documents • Allows traceability from the Standard to the System Design . Allows justification of the system requirements • Provides an auditable path for certification of the system

Need to add a Class to provide for capturing individual Standard statements from a Standard •

A Document documents the Standard statement • Standard statement are satisfied by System Requirements
