All material in the universe is made of very small particles

Objects can affect other objects at a distance

Changing the movement of an object requires a net force to be acting on it

The total amount of energy in the Universe is always the same, but energy can be transformed when things change or are made to happen

The composition of the Earth and its atmosphere and the processes occurring within them shape the Earth's surface and its climate

Our solar system is a very small part of one of millions of galaxies in the Universe

Organisms are organised on a cellular basis

Organisms require a supply of energy and materials for which they are dependent on or in competition with other organisms

Genetic information is passed down from one generation of organisms to another

The diversity of organisms, living and extinct, is the result of evolution

Science assumes that for every effect there is one or more causes

Scientific explanations, theories and models are those that best fit the facts known at a particular time

The knowledge produced by science is used in some technologies to create products to serve human ends.

Applications of science often have ethical, social, economic and political implications
